Lynne Nguyen is Vice President of the Asian American Health Coalition. She is also the Program Director for the National Cancer Institute’s Cancer Information Service, South Central Region, located at the University of Texas MD Anderson Cancer Center. She provides oversight for CIS collaborative research projects, develops research publications, and supports comprehensive cancer control efforts at the state, regional and national levels.

In her capacity as a consultant, Lynne has provided cultural competency training, with specific focus on Asian American issues, to more than 2000 health and social service providers.

A passionate community advocate, Lynne serves on the boards or advisory committees of many organizations, including the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation, the Intercultural Cancer Council, and St. Luke’s Episcopal Health Charities.

Lynne’s family arrived in the United States as political refugees in 1975, following the collapse of the South Vietnamese government. They were among the First Wave of Boat People from Southeast Asia. She uses her experiences, and the observed adaptational experiences of others to the American culture, to help healthcare providers and others to better navigate among cultures.

Lynne received her Bachelor’s degree in psychology and minor in sociology from the University of Houston and her Master’s in Public Health from the University of Texas School of Public Health. Lynne and her husband live in Houston with their 10 year old son.
